Academic Profile:

Teaching:

My areas of teaching specialisation are within 3-Dimensional studies and in practice-based post graduate supervision. I have taught Sculpture from second year to Masters level since 1995, both on a part-time, contract and full time basis (2014 -). I have a special interest in Practice-based Research (PBR) where creative output is merged with critical inquiry. I supervise on average 5 MFA students and 6 BFA students at any given time. I am the current co-ordinator of both the BFA and MFA programmes in the Department of Fine Art, having recently completed my practice-based PhD (2021).

Many of my former students have attained significant success in their studies. These include the Standard Bank Young Artist Award, Future Generation Art Prize and acceptance into the post graduate programme of the Rijksakademie in Amsterdam. The career success of graduates has been noted through selection onto major international and local exhibitions, academic appointments, public commissions and art related entrepreneurial activity.

Academic / Artist Initiatives:

In my capacity as a Rijksakademie van Beeldende Kunsten Alumni I was tasked with establishing an artist run initiative and in February of 2000, founded PULSE, which became the South African component of a larger global network of artist run initiatives, all of whom were linked to RAIN, the Rijksakademie Artists International Network. From 2000 – 2009 I executed several international projects, as well as participated in conferences and workshops within the RAIN Network. Within the PULSE projects, I was responsible for the conceptualizing, fund raising and co-ordinating of the projects. This included curating and organizing exhibitions, conferences, and walkabouts, as well as the production of the publications. I also oversaw all the financial aspects of the projects, from the raising of funds related to budget outlines to the administration and financial reconciliation of each project. The aim of PULSE was to create a platform for dialogue and debate amongst cultural producers worldwide. PULSE created projects around themes that were pertinent in context and that found resonance globally. Below is an account of the various international projects that PULSE organized as well as those it participated in:

Academic Development:

At the Durban University of Technology, I was involved in aspects of course planning, in particular the vertical and horizontal alignment of the 3D studies programme from 1st – 3rd years, as well as the co-ordination and management of the Advanced Diploma, Post Graduate Diploma and Masters programmes. I was involved in a restructuring of the post-graduate levels of study to align it with national norms and standards. I also served on various boards with regards to re-curriculum of various levels of study. I served as a member of the Faculty Research Committee (2015-2018) which confers on matters relating to Master's and PhD student research. I developed a new practice-based proposal template for post-graduate studies for the Faculty of Arts and Design. I am constantly furthering my pedagogical and practice research pursuits:

Creative Research:

I have regarded the practice of art as a form of critical enquiry, as conceptually reflective research. The phrase, Nothing Matters, embodied the paradox at the heart of my recently completed Practice-based PhD project (2021). At one level, the words suggest negation; at another level, the phrase invokes a more philosophical consideration that is linked to a history of artistic thought and practice. How to create artefacts that use the language of nothing, the void, the blank, the omitted, the interpretation of nothingness, as a vehicle to oppose the 'unaesthetic' language of the public space? These works reflected my position as an individual and a maker of things within a global climate in which it appears that our social, political, economic, spiritual, and emotional compasses are misaligned with the human environment, physical as well as psychological. My purpose was to pursue a paradox of possibility in art practice: how, in the context of a negative set of circumstances (the currently debased character of public language in South Africa (and for that matter globally) to create forms of representation that transfigure 'nothingness' into a vindication of the creativity of the human imagination.

Community Activity

- 2000 – 2009 Founder member and co-ordinator of PULSE

PULSE is an artist run initiative, founded in February 2000 by South African artist Greg Streak. PULSE is linked to an international network of artist initiatives in other developing countries including Argentina, Brazil, India, Indonesia, Mali and Mexico to name a few. This collective matrix is known as the RAIN Artists' Initiatives Network and is the brainchild of the Rijksakademie in Amsterdam, Holland. PULSE sought to create projects that critiqued issues and debates of global relevance, to be inclusive of the exclusive and celebrate the idiosyncratic and intimate within the visual arts. Many of the projects were created with social issues at the fore, and all projects had community / educative programmes attached to them.

- 2002 – 2004 Chairperson of Exhibitions committee of the KZNSA

The KZNSA is the oldest organisation for the Visual Arts in Kwa-Zulu Natal. It maintains a nationally reputed gallery, runs a well-established community programme with particular emphasis on street children, a shop selling craft and design items and a restaurant.
